

Kevin and his family lived in a middleclass neighbourhood Buru Buru. Eastern part of Nairobi. The area had houses being either 2 or 3 bed roomed bungalows.

Kevin transferred to a mission school which was more affordable. school fees where about 7 euros for each term.

Mostly it is middle class people who live in his area, but also a few people that would fit in the rich category.

For Kevin and Vivian's education they went to a prestigious institution. Strathmore college. Kevin studied Accounting and his sister Integrated Management information systems. Later they both went to university. Kevin a public and Vivian a private. By the time she completed college she already had a job and started to work for international organizations.

In the private school the students mainly interact in English where in public school they interact in Swahili.

Right now, they both own a car but from time to time they use public transport. Especially because of Nairobi traffic and getting affordable parking in Nairobi central business district can be very difficult.

When they grew up, they mainly used public transport. However, they lived far away from the school. They were dropped off at school in the morning by their father. Their father had been assigned a company car, but later on bought his own.

Kevin lives in a different county than his sister, which is about 50 kilometres from Nairobi town. He lives in a single room and rent is about 20 euros per month. He mainly uses the room for storage. He is mostly at Vivian's place.

In the Kenyan high school system, your performance in your final exams at primary school determines the school the students will go to. At that time there were 3 categories. National, Provincial and District. The best performing students would go to National schools. Kevin and his sister went to Provincial.

Vivian bought her apartment 3 years ago. It was an off-plan purchase - meaning it is a property before it has completed construction This means she does not pay any rent apart for a fee of about 40 euros a month.
